Thomas Bombelles is a consultant in the Global Challenges Division, World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO), in Geneva, Switzerland. The Global Challenges Division was created in 2009 to reestablish WIPO's role as the leading intergovernmental forum for addressing the intersection between intellectual property and global public policy issues. Major challenges such as public health, climate change, food security, preservation of biodiversity have significant intellectual property policy implications, and the Global Challenges Division works closely with other Divisions in WIPO to contribute to solutions which maintain incentives for innovation while ensuring that advances in human knowledge benefit countries at all levels of development.
